F | The American Cowboy

Translate the extract below into Norwegian.

After the Civil War the Americans discovered that the cows the Texans had left when they went out to war had bred and multiplied. Now there were millions of wild cattle on the southern plains. All you needed to do was to go there, get hold of some of these free cows and create your own herd. A lot of money could be made if you could get the cows to market. The only way to do that was to drive them a thousand miles up north to the closest railway – on horseback.
